ON NEW GROUND

After the orientation frenzy of ice-breakers and workshops advising them on how to deal with college, freshmen had the chance to face the school themselves and find their own legs. Some concentrated on academic pursuits, studying on their own like Aja Peters-Mason outside Trotter or getting direction from professors like Freshman Pei Pei Lu with Mandarin Professor Sujane Wu. Besides academics, freshman year was also defined by friends--friends you could always count on like Amy Robinson with Aaron Rubin or Aaron Smith with Andrew Rosskamm at Sager.

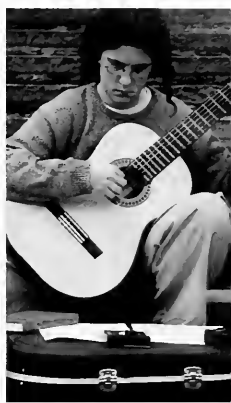

A FAMILIAR FEELING

Returning to the old stomping grounds during sophomore year was an experience filled with wild fun, deep retrospection, and perhaps uncertainty about the future. Some like Joanne Jacobson, Jessica Lee took part in the traditions of Dash for Cash and Screw while some like Yolanda enjoyed themselves on the Parrish Beach with friends. On the more serious side, Ilana Luft and Bryn Rosenfeld took advantage of the arboretum's tranquility to think about the pasts they left behind, the challenges they were conquering, and the odyssey ahead.

PATHOS OF A NEW DAY

Junior year was a the year where students felt the pressure to buckle down for the future yet also the need escape to a faraway land at the same time. Whether Juniors followed Eric Schober's lead and did research in the CP&P office or felt like Susie Ansell, Sade Gilpin-Jackson, and Molly Manvel and made the dash to another country like Grenoble, juniors also made sure that they were remembering and discovering their individuality. Juniors like Joyce Atkins, Hilary Rice, and Sara Gravelin learned that to relax, to play, and to perform was part of maintaining the balance in between.

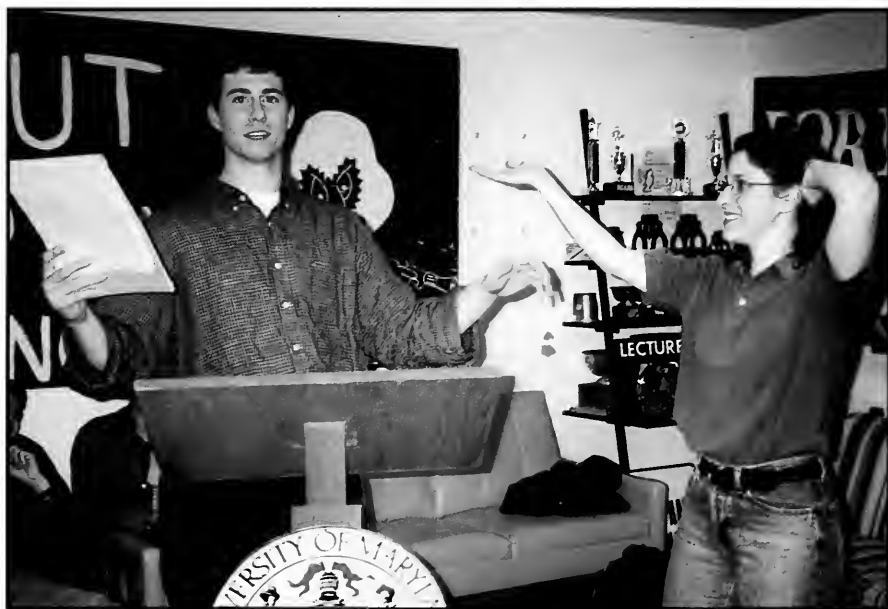

By the time Swatties reached Senior year, they had experienced the extremes of college life and found their own balance. Sari Altshuler and Ruth Shoemaker find friendship as a key link, while Tim Stewart-Winter finds satisfaction in the completion of his thesis. At the end of these four years, Seniors were commended for the completion of their undergraduate intellectual pursuits. The Swarthmore odyssey was now ending but as Seniors looking back, they realized that their education--intellectually, personally, and spiritually--had prepared them for the quests that were still ahead.

usually, sweats and jammies were the way to go, but look out and see for yourself how these seniors can strike that pose...

Above: Dan Bennett and Tenaya Scheinman show off their fancy debate moves in a mock practice before their competition with UPenn. Dan and Tenaya were not the only ones with good humors, though. The debate team was a hoot and a holler to work and play with.

Left: Keith Gilmore is all concentration in his studies. Here, he sits outside Dupont, taking in the fresh air and tranquility of the Swarthmore campus environment in order to invigorate himself for his academic pursuits.

the day never seems long enough. so many events, so many affairs to remember...

Above: Here are the men and women rugby teams just before the start of their most successful fundraising campaign, the "Dash for Cash." Streaking through Parrish Parlours gathered quite a crowd! The fans were never disappointed and got their money's worth.

Left: Getting a date at Swarthmore is not always an easy job and the annual "Screw Your Roommate" tradition was meant as one way to relieve that stress. However, the antics and schemes that came with "Screw" were oftentimes so crazy that they made that "relief" seem more like an outrageous circus. Freshman Catherine Clark climbed the rocky wall in Sharples, while her date, senior Keith Bentrup, pelted her with soaking, red paint balls. Romantic, isn't it?

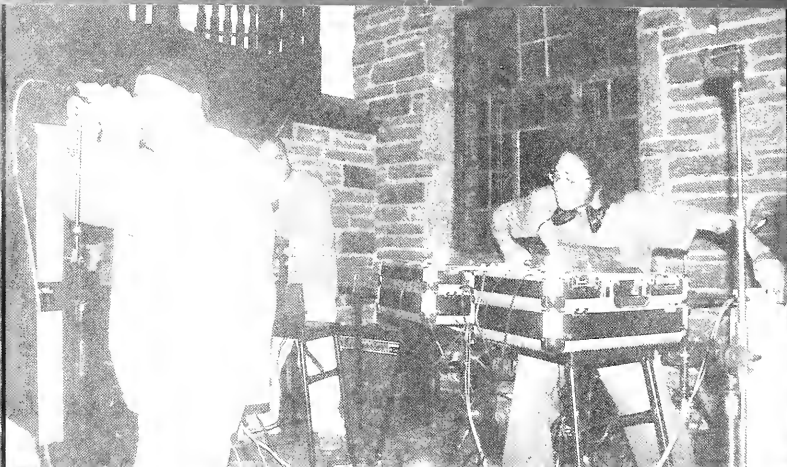

IN THE RHYTHM

daily life

The daily life of a Swattie is composed of 90% procrastination and 10% attempt to work. One can indulge in any activity for hours, claiming that he or she is having a "study break." Instead of hitting the books, Misha Horowitz'02 (top right) hits the ground while playing frisbee. Other hitting includes playing with a hacky sack like Eric Martin (bottom left) or drumming with friends under the Bell Tower just as Corey Mark'02 (bottom right). Seeking professional care from your hallmates is another way to procrastinate, as well as to save some money: simply get a new "home-made" haircut like brave freshman Alex Brennan (bottom) or enjoy the massage given by Chris Gaal' 04 (middle). However, when you run out of toothpaste, there is no "home-made" substitute. Shopping at Target is inevitable even for Marvin Barron'02 (far left). Still the best way to relax is to hop on the train like Chris Ang'04 (bottom) and spend the whole day hanging out in Philly!

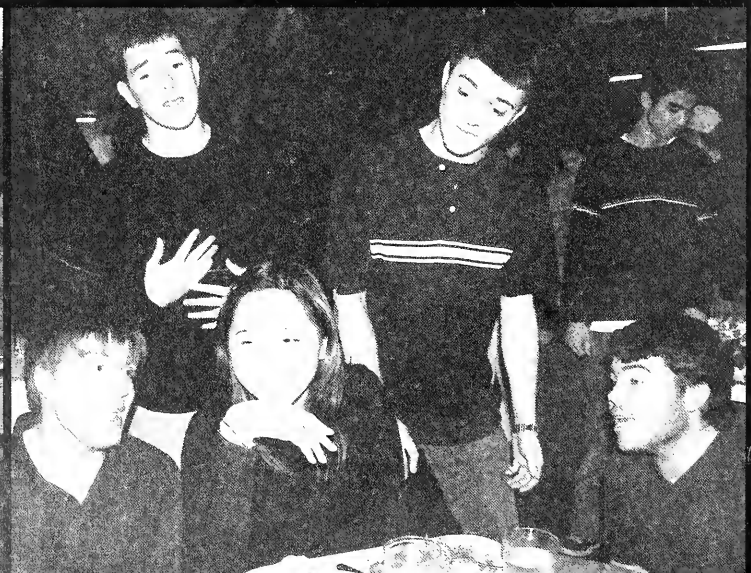

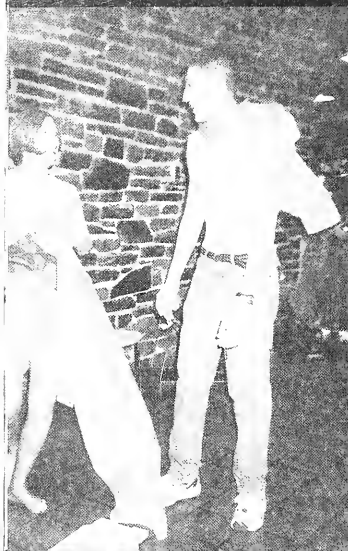

PARTY PALACE

nite life

As night falls, the Swarthmore campus turns into a lively place, full of music and joyful laughter. After a hard week day, a dirty sundae served by the charming Paces staff, including Andrew Breitenberg'01 and Jocelyn Braddock'04 (top right), could make you forget (at least for a while) that there are two more days till the weekend begins. Then Thursday comes, and it is time for Pub Night. It seems that freshmen like Katia Bobonis and Amber Cameron (bottom left) take advantage of the event much more than seniors do. On Fridays, Swatties enjoy the luxury of having to choose between more than one entertainment. Some of the options include listening to "Ellipsis" (bottom) at Rose Tattoo Café, shaking under the beat of hard-core rap performance at Olde Club (top left), or enjoying a classical music concert (right). Saturday is the time to dig in your wardrobe and dress up for a formal. On Halloween, no restrictions apply: let your imagination loose and dress up as your favorite bug like Claudia Zambra '01 (middle). On Sunday it was already time to start thinking about next weekend!

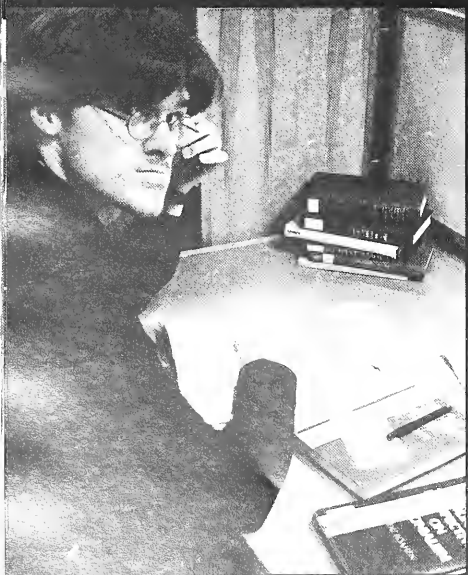

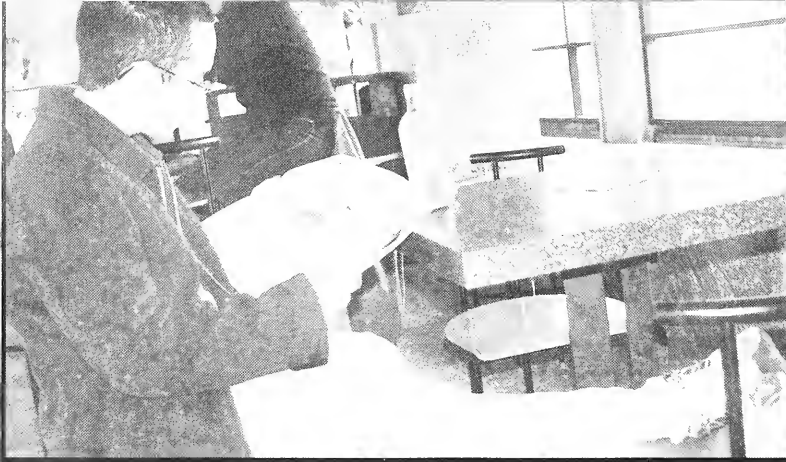

IT NEVER FAILS

traditions

Remember your first Screw date? Yes, it was embarrassing. Yes, all your friends were there. Yes, everyone was taking pictures. but at least after Screw you have enough stories to tell to your grandchildren one day. Screw is the only day when you can jump almost naked with impunity under the beat of Russian folk music like seniors Vasya Dostoinov and Kristen Sharpless (far left). However, your punishment may come in a totally unexpected way. No one is safe when all SWIL members and their supporters go out to the annual Pterodactyl Hunt (top right). Even if the Pterodactyl doesn't come and get you, the memebrs of Mixed Company will certainly find you and serenade for you on Valentine's Day like they did for Sarah Cheo '02 (bottom left). February 14th is not the only day of the year when Swatties show their musical abilities. SAO members and their friends (top middle) also share the joy of singing when they celebrate the Chinese New Year. That's how the years in SWAT roll away like the melody of a song!

WELCOME TO THE TERRORDOME

Freshmen begin their odyssey at Swat encouraged by the wise advice of upperclassmen, "You are still brilliant. but you just can't prove it anymore." Being the stubborn and all-questioning crowd that they are, students do the impossible to disprove the above statement. So they sweat over Orgo problem sets in Cornell like Kathleen Kristian '04 (top left) or pull an all-nighter to finish a paper like Wury Morris '04 (right), but it doesn't help very much. Evil thoughts start to crawl into the mind of the innocent student. Andrew Steele '04 (bottom left) starts to question his own state of mind after trying to comprehend an article written in some cryptic form of the English language. When you want to make yourself feel better, just blame everything on the computer like Ross Hoffman '04 (bottom right) and give up. However, the happy end comes sooner or later. Hang in there and wait for the moment of jubilation when you will be done with your senior thesis like Chris Woodrell '01 (middle).

outdoor candid

Outside McCabe and Cornell, Swarthmore is a whole new world. Driven by nostalgia for the childhood years, students use the nest-like sculpture in front of Trotter as a favorite gliding tool (far left). For those who like it wet, like sophomores Renee Willemsen-Goode and Kuzman Ganchev (top right), gliding in the mud around the creek is a much better alternative. Speaking of alternatives, Mark Hanis, Yasmin Khawja, and Jumatatu Poe (top left) offer popcorn and cotton candy to compensate for the taste (or lack thereof) of Sharples food. Even after all food is gone, WAWA crates (right) bring satisfaction. Their characteristic color and form make them especially appealing for Arts majors to express their creativity.

throughout our collegiate pursuits, they inspire us with the passion for learning...

Above: Sophomore Richard Tayar and Senior Derrick Nathan study in unison in the structure surrounding the lawn outside Kohlberg. Such nooks and crannies like these offered a sense of privacy yet also provided bright sunlight and energy. With the ten's of papers to write and the hundreds of pages of reading to do, finding just the right spot was key to concentration and understanding.

Left: Sophomore Ted Alexander and Junior Marcella Tortora are truly dedicated library clerks. Here, you can see the love, with Ted's appraisal of In Search of Civil Society: Market Reform and Social Change in China and Marcella's heartfelt clasp of hands. They found that working in the library allowed them to absorb the charma of intellectual curiosity permeating the room

Allen Kuharski

Not every professor can boast a 98 percent attendance rate in his lectures, but Allen Kuharski can. His secret, a plastic machine gun and stringent enforcement of time management. Of course, it could also be the socks. "I like to believe that my socks are responsible" admits Kuharski. "I have been consistently told by students that I wear the best socks of any faculty member on campus." Subsequently, Kuharski's socks are heavily discussed by his theatre students. In addition to keeping his students well entertained with his fashion taste, Kuharski is co-editing a 16-volume critical edition on stage history of Polish playwright Witold Gombrowicz, working with Teatr Provisorium & Kompania Teatr of Lublin, Poland, following the productions of his translation of Eugene Ionesco's Rhinoceros done in collaboration with George Moskos of the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures, collaborating with Helena Morawska White from the University of the Arts in Philadelphia in the translation of a new screenplay by Polish film-maker Agnieszka Holland, and continuing his collaboration with Jacek Luminski and the Silesian Dance Theatre company in Bytom, Poland.

Frank Moscatelli

When you think pompous parties, French food and expensive sport convertibles, you of course think of the physics department's Frank Moscatelli. Porche, Alpha Romeo, and presently a BMW, but always red. And on commencement morning, the physics majors get a smooth ride courtesy of Moscatelli. "Physics majors are very happy with the physics department," says Moscatelli, "we do a lot of partying, usually at my house." Moscatelli and his wife, who is French, are known as good cook and even better hosts. However, Moscatelli is really most known for his impromptu in-class comments that has students scrambling to write them down. "Generally, Tuesday and Thursday classes are long classes and simply lecturing totally on physics from beginning to end is a boring thing," admits Moscatelli, "so I find myself getting impromptu laughs." Comments such as "this [equation] got the uglies" and "you can go on, have children, success, etc., don't do that now" have inspired students to make of list of Frank Moscatelli quotes. In the most of amusing his students, Moscatelli has been a visiting scientist at the National Institute of Standards and Technology in D.C., investigating lasers and will continue to research this topic. Food, fun and physics makes one reconsider majoring in physics, no?

Flamingos, flamingos, and more flamingos. Several dozen line Donna Jo Napoli's front yard. Letters and crayon-drawn pictures from her adoring young fans cover her Pearson office. Although on occasion Napoli wears her Inuit boots, walking around shoeless is more like the norm. It is all part of the intimate, informal, and unconventional atmosphere of the linguistics department, which Napoli personifies. "Linguistics is a discipline that goes forward via argumentation," explains Napoli "so hypotheses are suggested and attacked until there is one that no one can attack." The constant exchange of information between peers and professors has inspired some of Napoli's work such as her introduction to American Sign Language after one of her students wrote a thesis on the topic. Already the author of numerous books and novels for children and young adults, Napoli is now helping to develop appropriate reading material for deaf children. She also plans to write a book on the course movement and cognition, which analyzes folk dance from mathematical and linguistics perspectives. "It is the first time that the Swarthmore mathematics, dance, and linguistics departments have offered a course together," says Napoli, and that makes for a "really far out [project]" playing for pride...

Above: The 2000-2001 Women's Swim Team is all smiles as they pose for a picture after winning the 2001 Centennial Conference Championships by defeating eight-time Champion Gettysburg. They had a remarkable season finishing 7-3 in dual competition and bringing home the first Women's Championship banner to Swarthmore.

Left: McKenna Coll '04 catches the ball in the corner and is about to drive to the basket before a packed house in Tarble Pavilion. This season the Women's Basketball team won the Centennial Conference Championship and qualified for the NCAA tournament. They finished this record breaking season 23-5 after being defeated by Gwynedd-Mercy in the 2nd Round of the NCAA tournament.

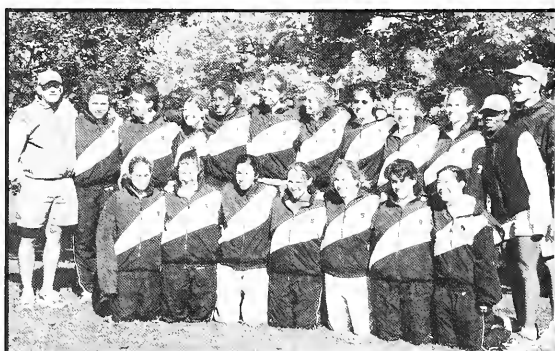

On the path to excellence

Approaching every meet as if it were the Conference Championship, the 2000 Men's and Women's Cross Country Team were undefeated in dual competition and also took Third Place in the Centennial Conference Championships.

Seniors Joko Agunloye and Marc Jeuland, who both qualified for the Regional Championships, led the team to the record books. Joko Agunloye also made headlines by qualifying for the National Championships for the second year in a row. This unstoppable force has set a standard for excellence.

Playing for pride, reclaiming their spirit

The 2000 season is going to be long remembered as the season in which the Tide turned and then was no more. As a collective force intent on realizing a long-time dream, this year's football team achieved landmark victories and established itself as a respectable and talented group of scholar-athletes. Led by the captains, Scott Murray, Tony Hillery, and Joe Corso, the Tide gained recognition and respect as they turned heads with upsets over Gettysburg and Washington and Lee. Posting its best record since 1995, the offense was led by running back Kenny Clark '03, who set numerous school records including the first running back to gain 1000 yards in a season. The Garnet Tide reclaimed the spirit of the school and validated the years of blood, sweat and tears poured into the program since Coach Alvanos's guidance began three years ago. Though it's last season, the Tide closed the tradition of Swarthmore football with undeniable pride, determination and heart.

Lighting the field on fire

The 2000 Women's Field Hockey team did not know the meaning of the word "quit". This past season was a perfect example of their drive. The Garnet, led by Seniors Kristen English, Katie Vivalo, and Maureen Vernon, had an amazing season. Nearly making the NCAA tournament, they successfully qualified for the ECAC Tournament and ended with a record of 14-7. The team played with a passion for the game and their hard work and dedication was reflected in their record.

Playing Field Hockey has undeniably been the most definitive and rewarding experience I have had during my time here at Swarthmore. The players and coaches are truly special and unique, and I have made friendships there that will last a lifetime. The lessons I've learned from my coaches and teammates on and off the field are what I will remember and carry on in the years to come. Field Hockey holds the best and brightest times of my life at Swarthmore, and I will forever cherish those memories.

New team, new attitude

The most prevalent challenge for the 2000 Men's Soccer team was cultivating a strong team from its predominately young group of athletes. Led by Senior captain Ryan Neiheiser, Junior captain Frank Sersale, and Sophomore captain Cameron MacDearmid, the team developed as a cohesive unit and continually raised the level of play with each coming game. With a combination of leadership, experience and young talent forming the core of the Garnet men's soccer team, look for them to build on this established tradition of excellence.

Always Kicking Grrk...ass!

This season was full of many ups and downs for the 2000 Women's Soccer team. The team started out strong, but plaguing injuries contributed to a 4-12 record. The women gave it their all, and left their hearts out on the field. Led by captains Heather Marandola, Sari Alschuler and Sarah Jay, the team never gave up and their love of the game and dedication was evident in their play. The core of the team will be back next year, ready to attack with a new attitude.

Youthful Spirit & Hard Work

The 2000-2001 Men's Basketball team was a very young squad with 11 freshman and sophomore members rounding out the roster. The Garnet gained a lot of experience this season and proved that they are an up and coming team by taking many teams into overtime and by upsetting Washington College. Senior Captain Eli Silk and Junior Captain Kyle Lewis have instilled in the team the drive and dedication that is needed to turn this program around. Look for the Garnet to make a move in the Conference next year as they return all five starters.

The camaraderie created through team involvement helps me learn to cope with a myriad of interpersonal, organizational, and performance pressures. Prioritizing activities, accepting direction, developing self-discipline, establishing strong bonds with teammates, relying on and trusting others, and coping with defeats and victories are essential life skills that I gain through membership on our team.

A Force to be reckoned with Champions! Just one word is needed to describe the 2000-2001 Women's Basketball team. The Lady Garnettes got off to a quick start and never looked back. This team brought the school together and Swat pride was evident everywhere from the dining hall to the painted bodies in Tarble Pavilion. Many fans watched as Senior Captain Heather Marandola and Junior Captains Emily Gray and Heather Kile led the Garnettes to victory in the 2001 Centennial Conference Championships. For the first time in school history Swarthmore hosted a NCAA Tournament Game, as the Garnet defeated Gwynedd-Mercy and advanced to the second round of the tournament. Many accolades were awarded for their effort including Adrienne Shibles, who was named Coach of the Year, Heather Kile, to the All- Centennial Conference Team, and Sarah Tufano, to the 2nd Team All Centennial Conference. The Garnettes posted a 23-5 record, which set a landmark school record for the most victories in a season. The team looks to pick up next season where it left off and advance to the alliteration rounds.

It is this team is made up of 15 of the most amazing people that I have ever had the pleasure of getting to know. They're my coaches and teammates on one level; best friends and role models on another. This team is exceptional because - whether it be scoring fifteen points a game, taking the charge, or causing "vocal turnovers" - each person has found a way to contribute day in and day out above and beyond anyone's expectations. Even better than going to the tournament was being able to host the first round. Playing in front of our packed house was unbelievable. It has been an experience beyond words.

Making Waves into the Record Books

The 2000-2001 swim season is one to be remembered. The Women finished with a record of 7-3 in dual competition and captured the 2001 Centennial Conference Champions by defeating seven-time champion Gettysburg. The Men's record was 3-6 in dual competition and finished 3rd at the Conference Championships. Swimming, a sport that is known for both it's individual and team competition, sometimes presents the challenge of developing a cohesive unit, but Senior Captains Rebecca Howes-Mischel, Alissa Parmelee, and Ted Scherer brought this team together with leadership and partnership to ensure its success. The women look to defend their title next year as the men strive to climb higher on the podium.

Running is a refuge, a place I can visit daily and which always gives me some level of peace with the way things are and with my personal limits. When I'm upset about something, the thrill of running helps me overcome that frustration and accept it. Plus, if I test myself physically, it gives me some better understanding of the other, non-physical tests I face, which are typically much more complex. The final thing I take from running is a confidence that hard work is the only viable existence: anything else and I am just cheating myself.

Swinging into a new season

Baseball was in the air this spring as the 2001 Garnet Tide took the mound. The Garnet fielded a fairly young squad with six of the starting nine being first year players. Captains Senior Josh Lindsey and Junior Scott Kushner provided leadership and experience on and off the field in order to build a solid foundation for the team. The Garnet finished the season strong with big victories over Western Maryland, Franklin and Marshall, and Gettysburg. The team looks to better its record in the seasons to come and should be able to do this as 18 of the 20 members return next season.

The central thing that I have learned from playing baseball at Swarthmore is how to push myself, to hold myself responsible for my failures, and for making myself better. I love baseball and would have played no matter how good or bad the situation, but finally having a team I am proud to play with and coaches I am proud to play for has made it that much sweeter. There is no better feeling in any sport than driving a 2-1 fastball deep.

"Swing Batter, Batter, Swing"

For the 2001 Softball Team, it was not about the amount wins or losses on their record; it was about heart. Senior Captains Portia Kelly and Heather Marandola provided a positive role model for the team to emulate. They played with their heart and soul and held nothing back on the field and that was how they measured whether they had won or not. Swarthmore finished the season strong by sweeping Haverford and by winning 4 out of their last 7 games. With this new attitude and determination the team looks to better its record next year as they take the field with a determination to succeed.

“Softball has been an incredible part of my life since elementary school. In fact, I can't imagine a spring passing me by without pulling out my glove and cleats and heading to the field for practice. Pitching is a blend of my love for the sport and my competitive urge to be a part of every single play on the diamond. Pitching becomes much more a mental battle than a physical one, and the feeling you get after you win that battle is one that I can only describe when I'm on the mound. It's addictive, it's challenging, it's going to be a part of me forever, and that's why I love to play so much.

Nothing but fairways and greens

The 2001 Men's Golf team came into the season ready to compete and approached the tee boxes with a sense of determination. Being a part of the team gave them a chance to be involved in a sport while they enjoyed the true essence of the game. The game of golf is one that involves both skill and the mental capacity to plan ahead and strategize. The Men's Golf team finished with a record of 4-2 in season play with defeats over USP, the University of the Sciences, and school rival, Haverford. The Garnet finished 7th at the Centennial Conference Championship.

Golf has been a great change of pace this spring. While it is competitive, it is also a relaxing way to enjoy the springtime. From the spring break trip on, there has been a really good sense of camaraderie both among the players and between the players and coach.

Aggressive by Nature

The 2001 Men's Lacrosse Team played a very aggressive style of lacrosse. They did not back down from their opponents. Instead, they rose to the challenge that lay before them. Led by Senior Captain Mark Dingfield and Junior Captain Blake Atkins, this fairly young squad took the field each day with a mission: to play their hardest and give it their all. The captains supplied the team with a will for intensity and determination and it was evident in their play. No matter what the score was this team did not give up.

During my year of playing lacrosse, it provided me with a rewarding experience. Frustrations after a tough game in day, have played past the morning the length of the field and only on a Swarthmore team. Would I have had the support to try, goal tending my junior year and end up starting as a senior. I have met some of my best friends and learned more about myself as a result of playing lacrosse and, coupled with the other wonderful aspects of Swarthmore, it has made for a comfortably rounded experience.

Intensity at its Best

The 2001 Lacrosse Team was a talented group of women who played against some of the best competition in the nation. There were three nationally ranked teams in the Centennial Conference in which Swarthmore participated and in each game the Garnet played right with them and proved that they were a team to be reckoned with. Led by Senior Captains Natania Kramer and Kristen English and Junior Captain Katie Tarr, the Garnet took to the field each day with an attitude that they could defeat anyone on any given day. An integral part to the team's success was for the players to have fun while playing the sport they love. Coach Karen Borbee constantly encouraged the team to have fun out on the field and not to think about each play and, evidently, it worked for the Garnet, as they ended with a record of 10-5.

Smashing, lobbing, aching

The 2001 Men's Tennis team was a mixture of youth and experience, which benefited the team nicely. Their schedule included competing against many top teams, illustrating that the Garnet should be regarded as a top team. The Garnet were led by Senior Peter Schilla who competed at the first singles position. His leadership brought the team together as the Garnet qualified for National Championships held in late May. The Garnet looked to build on the season as they were certain to gain more and more confidence with greater competition and hard work.

Swat tennis is a unique program. It's an individual sport that, at the same time, is a team effort. It's so close-knit that the players rely on each other not only for support, but also for a tight match or a long season. This year was a great year, and it will be tough to replace the great seniors on the team - but with the depth we have at the bottom of the lineup of six freshmen, next year's team looks to make the push towards Nationals once again.

Senior Captains Stacey Wagaman and Jennifer Pao instilled a sense of team pride and determination and coupled with their athletic skills, the team qualified for the National Championships. The Garnet were undefeated in Conference play and finished with a record of 12-3 as they went on to become the 2001 Centennial Conference Champions. Pushing, Striving to the Extreme

The 2001 Men's and Women's Track team was a talented group of athletes that continually reaped the rewards of individual and team effort and talent. At Swarthmore, Track and Field is a sport that is known for both its individual and team aspects, allowing athletes to push themselves to the extreme while being apart of a larger unit all striving for the same goal. Seniors Joko Agunloye, Sarah Jay, and Marc Jeuland were great role models for the underclassmen to look up to. They captured the spirit of athletics at its best and they pushed themselves to the edge each and every day. By approaching each competition with this attitude the squad enjoyed both individual and team success as both teams held winning records and Jeuland and Agunloye qualified for Nationals.

whether planned, anticipated, or completely unexpected, these turn of events left

Above: Junior Linda Thai poses with five of China's most influential and famous directors, after having spent the day giving them a tour of Philadelphia's South Street. The directors were central to Swarthmore's first ever Chinese Film Festival, personally giving introductions to their internationally and nationally acclaimed films and generously answering questions after the screening. The directors above from left to right are Wu Zinui, Shi Shujun, Xie Jin, and Huo Jianqi.

A Festival of Honors

Chinese Film Festival

The first ever Chinese Film Festival and Symposium was held during the month of October and was composed of screenings of 5 of China's most notable and internationally and nationally acclaimed films and an all-day symposium featuring scholarly debate about the development, impact, and future implications for Chinese Cinema. For the scholars and the spectators, the most remarkable feature of the Film Festival was the opportunity to converge in a dialogue with the directors of the films themselves after each film screening as well as during the all-day symposium. * The directors were representative of the 3rd through the 6th Generation of Chinese filmmakers and although they all had strong opinions about the contribution and direction of Chinese Cinema, they themselves agreed that a true generational dialogue had been achieved through their convergence at Swarthmore. * This Film Festival was due in great part to the inspiration and organization of Swarthmore's own Professor Haili Kong, who spent more than two years brainstorming and preparing this celebration of Asian Cinema.

Back Row (L-R): Professor Alan Berkowitz, 5th Generation Director Luo Jianqi (That Mountain, That Man, That Dog), Professor Haili Kong, Tingting Yan, 5th Generation Director Wu Ziniu (Nanjing, 1937). Front Row: Junior Linda Thai, 4th Generation Director Shi Zhicun (Death of a College Girl), Third Generation Director Xie Jin (The Opium War)

Professor Haili Kong

"Originally, my idea was to simply hold a symposium wherein scholars in the field of Chinese Film could discuss the meaning and impact of a century of Chinese Cinema. When we brought in the actual directors so integral to Chinese Filmmaking itself, the Film Festival really became a generational dialogue between scholars and film watchers and especially among the directors themselves."

Meggie Miao

Sophomore Meggie Miao translated for Director Huo Jianqi during the screening of his internationally acclaimed film That Mountain, That Man, That Dog (Na Shan, Na Ren, Na Gou). The other translators were Sophomore Feng He and Seniors Yingjie Li and Lily Yang. It seems Meggie has film in her blood, her mother having been one of the symposium speakers. Can you spot her among the pictures?

A Wealth of Diversity

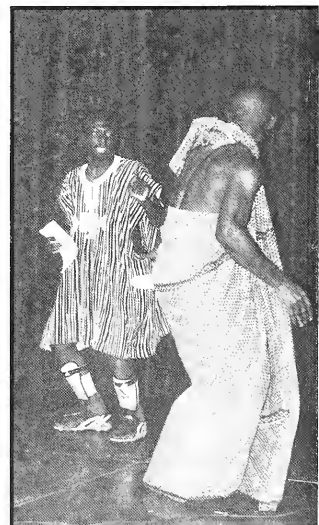

Diversity Week

The Diversity Week was an amalgam of events that included comedians, cultural talent shows, the Parade of Nations Festival, lectures, dialogues and much more. Of the Week, William Tran states: "Being one of the main organizers was an exhausting but rewarding experience. The whole committee had to show so much dedication, but it was all worth it in the end because we knew that we had contributed to a new and important set of events to the campus that hopefully will become a Swarthmore Tradition."

Senior Dance Concert

The Senior Dance Concert was the culmination of choreography by Seniors including Chris Woodrell, Rodney Morris, and Aryani Manning as well as performances by students from all the repertory dance classes. The audiences were treated to performances that showcased African Dance, Flamenco, and Tap among others.

Chris Woodrell,
Dancer and Choreographer

"The Dance Program at Swarthmore has taught me that there is a lot more to dancing than just ballet barres.

It has been a process of branching out. And it's been great to have unlimited access to fantastic teachers and classmates. I will miss them"

Aryani Elisabeth Manring,
Dancer and Choreographer

"When I dance, I am responding to the world as fully and as deeply as I possibly can.

When I make dances for myself, I am exploring and attempting to communicate a personal history. When I perform these dances, I thank everyone and the world for the dialogue we make."

Turn of Events

Racial Profiling Controversy

The Racial Profiling Controversy erupted after an incident involving an African-American male and Caucasian Ville police officer. Following the incident, student groups took active roles in increasing awareness about racial profiling, an issue seemingly been muted before. A Walk and a Speak Out were organized in order to produce informative and non-confrontational dialogue with the Swarthmore Community. Senior Rodney Morris, at the event, commented that the issue was no where near over, but it was rather finding strong beginnings in awareness.

Athletic Cuts

Students usually look at November as an ominous month of papers and finals preparation, but the Athletic Cuts was an explosive issue that shocked the Swarthmore Community and gave them other pressures to understand, confront, and resolve. The Board of Managers decision to cut Football, Wrestling, and Badminton was unexpected and public meetings were held between the Provost, President Al Bloom, alumni, parents, and students.

Laural Kean

"The goal of the walk was to raise awareness about the issue of racialized police treatment. It was successful, I think, because of its non-confrontational nature. Both the Walk and the Speak Out were designed to be informative, and because of the thought put in to the types of events we have decided to have, they went smoothly."

Chris Sajdera

"I am disappointed that football is no longer at Swarthmore. Football was one of the best educational opportunities. Hard work, dedication, and teamwork are just a few of the lessons that Football taught us. The decision to cut football from Swarthmore not only destroys any true diversity at Swarthmore, but also eliminates a passionate game that provided important lessons to those who chose to take on its challenges. I have become a better person because I had to struggle through both my academics and being a football player. It saddens me that no one at Swarthmore will ever experience this again. Football at Swarthmore was very important to me, and Swarthmore will never be the same for me again."

in the madness that can sometimes be swarthmore, we could always find a haven in our

Above: Sophomores Esther Kim and Marilee Serrania, Freshman Tara Trout, and Junior Marilyn Guzman prepare a festival fit for a king in the Willets dorm. They enjoyed spaghetti with artichoke hearts and topped the evening off with a homemade strawberry pie with whipped cream on the side to round out the delicious flavors.

Left: Seniors Kathryn Tong, Young-Ai Lee, Sofiya Cabalquinto, Diana King, and Elaine Allard have been friends since their freshman years. For their senior year, they made sure that they lived on the same third south hall in Mertz. Being within such close proximity made easier the emergency girl talks and necessary study breaks to get through each day.

Dana 2nd

You can't understand Dana until you've lived here. You grow to know the twisty hallways so well that you can navigate them without bumping into corners when you're still half-asleep. Climbing over people sitting in the hall at the corners on the ledges isn't unusual. Dana 2nd is the crazy hall that has fielded three intramural teams (and we even won once in a while!). We're also the hall that invades Sharples for hall games every Wednesday night. Our lounge is a jungle - literally, filled with plants. Our quoteboards too numerous to list. Too sketchy to print! Leg wrestling, ice skating, Twister, Svat Balderdash and Pictionary, anyone? On Dana 2nd you can't write "asleep" on your door without it turning into "a sleep" or something more cryptic. - Annie Baumgartner

Roberts was the phat dorm with enormous rooms and lots of crazy sophomores and juniors. The first floor centered around an 8-block of sophomore and junior guys, whose weekend parties were rivaled only by the 5-block on the second floor. The off-campus status of Roberts brought a very diverse cross-section looking for a respite from the on-campus grind and a great lounge to cook in whenever desired. Big events with Pitt and Palmer were the annual Twister Championships, the Italian Food Fest, the Oscar Party, and Karaoke Night.

Our hall theme is "ABSOLUT EF 3rd" so our walls are covered with hundreds of interesting Absolut ads, which only adds to how colorful and eclectic our hall is. We tend to be a late-night hall, we know how to have a good time, and we have a heck of a lot of talent... for one, we have athletes galore! We have two hamsters (one gave birth to a dozen more the other day). We have the swattie with the best Boston accent, and random late-night field hockey matches in the hallway showers. The members of our hall surely seem to consider themselves the coolest and we all have a great time together.

Performing Arts

The comedians from Vertigo-go and their friends from the Harvard improv group showed their talent and creativity in Mephistos (left).

Every Tuesday, The Ballroom and Swing Dance Club organized Argentine Tango lessons for the staff and the student body. Free dance lessons began in 1998 and enrollment since then has steadily grown to learn the two-step, the box-step, with some other twists and swirls thrown in there as well (down left).

Meanwhile, the members of 6 Cents perform at Olde Club during their annual Halloween celebration. 6 Cents was well-known for pelting the audience with all kinds of good candies throughout the performance.

Fun & Recreation

The Swarthmore Warders of Imaginative Literature—commonly known as SWIL—played human chess outside of Parrish. This was an annual event held by SWIL and open to the entire campus. (left)

The students from the Photography Club showed their unconventional view of the world at the Photography Show in LANG. The Photography Club had a very successful and momentous year due to the opening of Sharples III, a venue completely dedicated to showcasing student art.

Counseling & Advice

Sexual Health Counselors

Ty Wilde '01 supports her SAMee Ryan Chahrour'04 with advice the night before spring finals. SAM's gave advice that ranged from academic concerns like what classes to take to random questions like what's the best place for Chinese food. One underlying continuity of the SAM program was the devotion to help students, especially freshmen, get adjusted to Swarthmore as well as possible (down left).

Kate Fama, Meggie Miao, and Natalie Briones take a climb up the belltower to get a holistic look at the Swarthmore campus. They waited in line for nearly an hour, but the wait was worth it, especially since it is unknown when the bell tower will be open again. * Pablo Montagnes is a hungry, hungry man, savoring every bite of his juicy hamburger at a Willets BBQ. Later, colossal amounts of ketchup and onions were found to have disappeared. Any ideas on who took them? (HINT HINT) * Meanwhile, Andrea Wong, although born in the year of the monkey, has a secret attraction to dragons. She especially likes the kind of dragons that are not afraid to give her a peck on the cheek every so often. *

Elizabeth Nolte knows where the wild things are. But when she studies, she heads to the Kohlberg coffee bar, orders a tall black coffee, and hits the books.

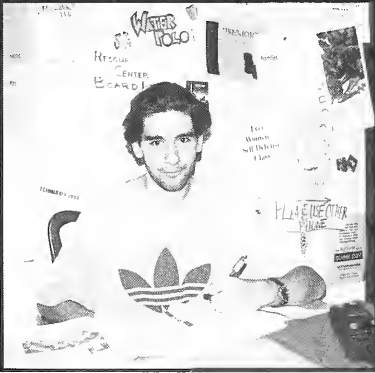

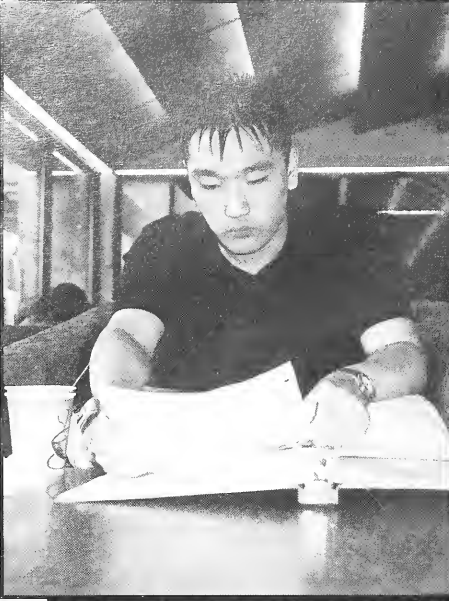

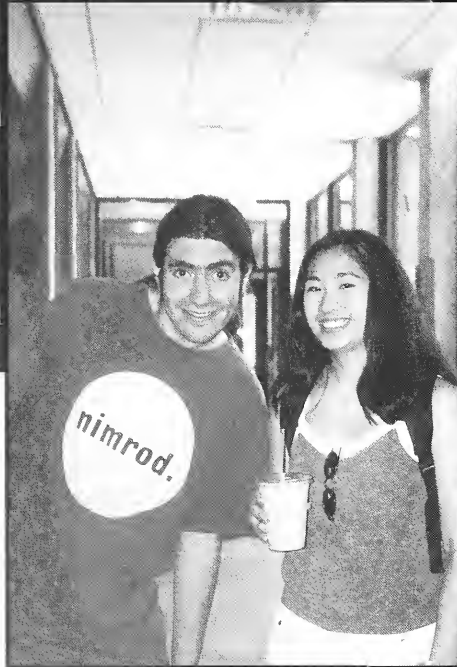

Nicole Perez shows off her talent on the cuatro, strumming a little for the yearbook photographer, Philip Garboden. On her best day, Nicole wooed stadiums full of people. On her worst day, the neighbors upstairs would bang their brooms on her ceiling. Go figure. Different strokes for different folks. * Horatiu Stefan finds his fun laying on top of strange desks, striking sexy, come-hither poses to attract passerby's. Woooo hooo, Horatiu! You are such coy boy.

It's only eight am, but Mike Cho is already studying for his Bio 2 quiz. He's so hardcore, he's scary. * Carol Duong is also on top of her business. She's visiting the CP&P office to find an internship for the summer. Looks like she knows the camera is on her, though. You can tell by her smile. * Fabienne Francois also gets serious, brainstorming for her French seminar paper. Fabienne found that, like her heroine Buffy the Vampire Slayer (see above Fabienne's left shoulder), she worked best late in the evening

Aurelio Perez actively keeps guard at the Parrish Desk, saving students from the the misguidance of the voice recognition system. Aurelio was known to rescue at least 4 or 5 Swatties a night, cramming in some studying for his pre-med classes at the same time. Aurelio, our hero!

Looks like Micah White has gotten himself in deep trouble again! Instead of reading the chapter on "Michelangelo", he accidentally read the chapter on Michael and Jell-o

Jonathan Konits knows how to get his groove on. He's diggin' the tunes on the radio and even breaking out some of those old 80's "Check me out!" moves. * One of Ed Way's favorite places to visit was the Franklin Mint Campus Bank. Not only could he fill out fairly simple forms, but he would hear "Cha-ching" sounds ring in his ear. That makes Ed happy. * Ben Galynker and his friend look pretty satisfied themselves, playing the "I bet I can stare at you longer without blinking than you can stare at me without blinking---Nuh uh--Bet you can't" game.

Ellie Salgado and Anne Baumgartner take a rock and a roll on the lawn outside of farble. They preferred not to pretend to pose candidly, instead going for the "I'm not afraid to look you in the eye" look Shook Yee Teh looks all nervously cute while waiting for her Steamed Fish and Mao Pao Tofu to be served at the Four Rivers Restaurant in Philadelphia. Don't let those sweet eyes and beautiful smile fool you, though, guys---wait, nothing to fool. Shook Yee's got a heart of gold. * Jordan Brackett walks briskly to turn in his paper before the 3pm deadline. Watch out, Jordan! Don't go too fast or else you'll walk right off the page!

After giving Linda Thai two Calvin and Hobbes books, Ted Chan proves that he is the real tiger. Those long fangs certainly bear a remarkable resemblance to chopsticks. (Don't tell Ted, though. He really believes he is a sabertooth tiger). * Gee whiz, Al Bui! Not everyone gets to have a car. That's bad enough. But why do you have to ride your police motorcycle around in Mertz? Some people just have it all.

Mike Smith. 'nuff said.

Lindsay Newbold rips out the newly blooming flowers right out from their roots in the waves of green grass. Lindsay is indeed Nature's child.

Dave Chu is a very conscientious voter. He grilled Mike Morse about his educational policies. * Rodney Morris and Sabrina Parra-Garcia belt out the tunes for Madonna's "Material girl". They followed with "Like a Prayer" before turning to "When Doves Cry". They are real eighties babies.

Friends were an essential part of surviving Swarthmore, not only for the company they provided but also for the emotional support. Kate and Dan (above) and Andy and Linda (right) were lucky enough to find such friends in each other. "Bestest buddies" forever.

Christine Shin and Leana Lum work side-by-side at SAO's annual East of Sharples dinner.

Elisa Matula paints the town red, with a little yellow and magenta thrown in too, as she studies abroad in Grenoble during the spring semester. Isn't she cute? Looks just like Mary Tyler Moore. All that's missing is the hat toss. But who can't find a beret in Paris? You go, girl.

Nicholas Lum means business when he cooks. Stay out of the kitchen as he prepares the Pad Thai for SAO's East of Sharples. From the look on his face, though, it's always service with a smile.

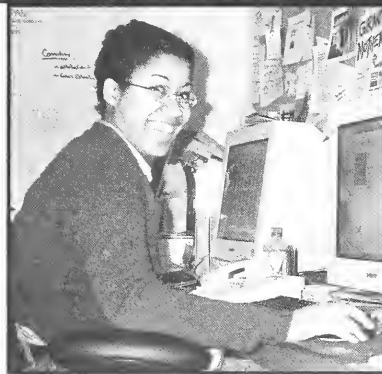

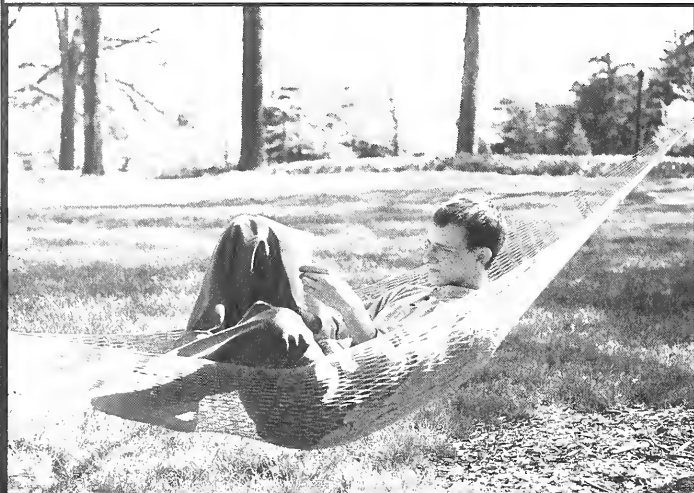

Isabelle Tran and Cathy Ta take a walk on the dark side, plotting their next victim for dinner. Will it once be the spring roll or will they set their sites on that wicked potato casserole?

Surbhi Gupta gets down and funky at a Friday night Paces party. Looks like she's looking for a showdown--Michael Jackson's "Beat It" style * Marilyn Guzman gets the giggles while working on the Dorm Life Section for the yearbook. Isn't she darling when she laughs?

Catherine Salussolia celebrates her birthday with a home-cooked pasta dinner and cake that her friends prepared. Sweet friends for a sweet gal!

We sense you have been greatly enriched by your four years at Swarthmore—even more than we have been impoverished! If so, it has been well worth it. You've built relationships that will last a lifetime, made quantum leaps in intellectual and personal growth, and become a gourmet cook. We're confident that these achievements (particularly the cooking), along with your kind heart and excellent sense of direction, will get you wherever you want to go in life. With love and admiration, Ma and Alb.

Our journey seemed so long that morn,
our goals so far away.
But time slipped by once you were born.
We knew you could not stay.

You learned to crawl, then walk and run,
to read, to write, compute.
And you did with such great fun,
that no one would dispute.

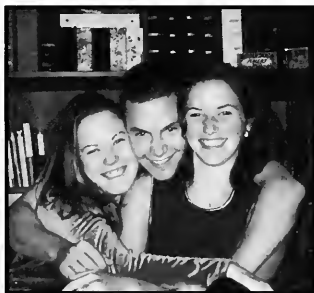

With passing years, our pride would swell
As each success you'd reach
You learned the lesson all so well then others you would teach.

This day you've reached another goal
And Honors you have won.
We tell you with all heart and soul,
we're blessed to call you son.

Your respect for others, your reverence for truth and righteousness, your ever-present sense of humor, and your steadfast commitment to all you undertake will ensure your bright future. Our love goes with you always.

Make one of your own.

there were times when you thought you'd never make it and questioned your philosophy of learning. though the challenge was daunting, it was not impossible. you have done it. you are the academic, the scholar-athlete, the artist, the philosopher, the humanitarian. four years of a swarthmore odyssey, and you have reached your destination.

this is your day...
